Reviewer comments:

Introduction: The research article titled "Law Enforcement Against Criminal Acts of Subsidized Liquefied Petroleum Gas Abuse in Indonesia" explores the legal aspects of enforcing regulations related to the misuse of subsidized Liquefied Petroleum Gas (LPG) in Jakarta. Given the crucial role of income generated from the oil and gas industry in national development, this study assumes a prominent significance. The research utilizes a deductive approach, incorporating both the Statute Approach and the Case Approach, and is rooted in the Law Enforcement Theory and Punishment Theory. The primary objective is to analyze the legal implications and consequences of the misuse of subsidized LPG, a government effort to reduce fuel subsidies and alleviate the financial burden on the state.

Content and Methodology: The research methodology, while comprehensive, would benefit from greater clarity and detail regarding the specific procedures and data collection methods used in the study. Providing a more transparent description of the research process would enhance the credibility of the findings and enable other scholars to replicate the study. Additionally, it would be advantageous to expand on the empirical data collection and analysis methods, as this could provide valuable insights into the practical aspects of enforcing LPG regulations.

Key Findings: The article successfully identifies the issue of criminal misuse of subsidized LPG gas and its impact on disadvantaged individuals and small-scale businesses. The research emphasizes that these actions, often carried out by willing perpetrators without coercion, have far-reaching consequences. The legal consequences, as delineated under Article 55 of the Oil and Gas Law and Article 113 of the Trade Law, are thoroughly discussed. The findings aptly point out the necessity of enforcing criminal law to address this social issue and ensure the compliant distribution of subsidized LPG gas in accordance with existing regulations.

Recommendations for Revision:

1. Enhanced Methodology Explanation: The article should provide a more detailed and transparent description of the research methodology used. This should encompass data collection and analysis methods to make the research process more understandable and reproducible.

2. Practical Insights: To add practical relevance to the research, consider incorporating real-life case examples or interviews with stakeholders involved in enforcing LPG regulations. These insights can provide a deeper understanding of the challenges and issues faced by law enforcement agencies and help in formulating more effective strategies.
3. Policy Implications: While the research effectively identifies the problem, it could be strengthened by offering specific policy recommendations or suggestions for improving the enforcement of LPG regulations. This would make the research more actionable for policymakers and law enforcement agencies.

Conclusion: The research article sheds light on a critical issue of criminal misuse of subsidized LPG gas in Indonesia, emphasizing the far-reaching consequences on disadvantaged individuals and small-scale businesses. It aptly underscores the need for effective enforcement of criminal law to address this social problem. By refining the methodology, adding practical insights, and providing policy recommendations, this research could become an even more valuable resource for stakeholders and policymakers dealing with LPG regulation enforcement in Indonesia.
